DIGEST AND PURPOSE

Selling checks can generally be characterized as the practice of accepting money in exchange for issuing a payment instrument that the purchaser can then use to make a payment, in lieu of using the purchaser's personal check or sending cash. Traditional non-bank check sellers are licensed in Texas under the Sale of Checks Act. The rapidly changing business environment due to the emerging electronic economy has raised concerns that the Sale of Checks Act does not extend its traditional protections beyond paper checks to electronic transactions that are substantively the same. H.B. 1166 provides regulatory license requirements for check sellers and expands the definition of "check" to include electronic checks.
