DIGEST AND PURPOSE

Currently, a law enforcement or custodial officer is eligible to retire and receive a standard retirement annuity after 20 years of service. At this time, there are 517 Department of Public Safety (DPS) commissioned officers who will have at least 20 years of service and be at least 50 years of age on or before August 31, 2002. DPS officials indicate that 28 years is the average length of service, since many officers retire upon reaching 20 years while others remain for 35 years or more. Based on this information, DPS estimates that approximately 300 officers will retire on or before August 31, 2002. An incentive which rewards officers who accrue 30 or more years of service credit might reduce the number of seasoned, experienced officers who retire in the next biennium. As proposed, S.B. 1132 creates a retirement incentive for law enforcement and custodial officers who have 30 years or more of service credit.
