AUTHOR'S/SPONSOR'S STATEMENT OF INTENT

Texas has long held an important role in the stability and success of national defense efforts and is home to an array of defense installations, defense dependent communities, and defense industries. Texas' 18 major military installations comprise 11 percent of the nation's military forces. Over 190,000 members of the various military branches are currently stationed in Texas.

Along with those 190,000 military personnel, there are thousands of military spouses, dependents and family members in Texas. As service members are transferred to Texas installations, families from around the country and abroad are uprooted and working dependents are forced to leave their employment and find work in Texas. This employment transition is difficult and stressful.

With the upcoming Department of Defense base realignment and closure (BRAC) round, several of Texas' defense installations can expect to gain even more missions and troops. Several of Texas' defense communities can expect an influx of military spouses and dependents, many of whom will be looking for employment. Texas must work to create a better support system for these unemployed workers. Helping newly transferred dependents quickly find employment in Texas will help military families make a smoother transition into the state.

As proposed, S.B. 212 directs the Texas Workforce Commission to create programs in Texas' defense dependent communities to support military families by providing employment assistance services to the spouses and dependents of military personnel who are assigned to duty in Texas.
