AUTHOR'S / SPONSOR'S STATEMENT OF INTENT

Currently, approximately 300 speech-language pathologist (SLP) positions are vacant throughout the state, which means that 22,000 students who need help are not getting it. This represents an overall vacancy rate of 8.7 percent, with a 19.2 percent vacancy rate for bilingual SLPs. Currently there are only 11.5 audiologists employed in Texas public schools statewide. Such a low number of audiologists means that the vast majority of school districts contract out services for students with hearing disabilities to a private provider. This is an undesirable result, in terms of both effectiveness and cost efficiency.

Due to attrition and a recent decrease in SLP graduates, the number of licensed pathologists needed to work in public schools is expected to increase by 30 percent by 2016. National data show that appropriately trained and educated SLPs make a significant difference not only in a child's communication skills but also in his or her educational achievement. Fully licensed (master's degree) SLPs are best qualified to independently help students with complex disorders that are becoming more common in schools—including developmental disabilities, traumatic brain injuries, voice disorders, stuttering, autism, and various other social disorders.

Sixty-four percent of Texas university students in communication disorders programs (SLPs and audiologists) surveyed indicated that the cost of tuition and fees is the greatest barrier to seeking and completing a master's degree. A major contributor to this problem is that many programs are full, due to a shortage of doctoral faculty teaching courses—a vicious cycle. This critical shortage of doctoral level faculty in Texas and nationwide is largely due to the “graying of the profession” and the cost of obtaining a doctoral degree. National accreditation standards require faculty expertise at the doctoral level for training of master's degree students.

In order to help meet the growing need for SLPs and audiologists, S.B. 620 aims to decrease the cost of obtaining an advanced degree in these areas. The bill creates a loan repayment assistance fund from which the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board can distribute monies it receives from gifts, grants, and donations. Providing loan repayment assistance grants to SLPs/audiologists who hold a master's degree and teach in public schools and to SLPs/audiologists who hold a doctoral degree and are employed at institutions of higher education would create an incentive to furthering education in a critical field.

As proposed, S.B. 620 amends current law relating to student loan repayment assistance for speech-language pathologists or audiologists employed by a public school or as faculty members of certain graduate programs at public institutions of higher education.
